1. Perceptual Learning for Native and Non-native Speech	1
Melissa Baese-Berk
1. Perceptual Flexibility of Native Phonological Categories	4
2. Acquisition of Novel Phonological Categories	8
3. Adaptation to Foreign Accented Speech	14
4. Conclusions and Speculation	19
References	23
Further Reading	28
2. A Common Representation of Serial Position in Language and Memory	31
Simon Fischer-Baum
1. Position Representation Schemes	33
2. A General Method for Contrasting Schemes	36
3. Experimental Findings	39
4. Discussion	44
References	52
3. Neurocomputational Emergentism as a Framework for Language Development	55
Arturo E. Hernandez, Juliana Ronderos and Hannah L. Claussenius-Kalman
1. Localization of Function	58
2. The Sensorimotor Hypothesis	61
3. Variability of Language Development	67
4. Neuroemergentism: Dynamic Interactions Across Systems	75
5. Conclusion	78
Acknowledgments	78
References	79

4. Syntactic Adaptation	85
Edith Kaan and Eunjin Chun
1. Introduction	86
2. Evidence for Syntactic Adaptation in Comprehension	88
3. Mechanisms Underlying Syntactic Adaptation	90
4. Evidence for Syntactic Adaptation?	93
5. What Is the Relation Between Adaptation and Learning?	102
6. Concluding Remarks	110
Acknowledgments	110
References	111
5. Neural Indices of Structured Sentence Representation: State of the Art	117
Ellen Lau
1. Linguistic and Non-linguistic Relations	119
2. Neural Correlates of Linguistic Relations: Three Candidates *	121
3. Conclusion	138
References	139
6. Familial Sinistrality and Language Processing	143
Chia-lin Lee
1. Introduction	144
2. Language-Related Processing as a Function of Familial Sinistrality	145
3. Theories of Familial Sinistrality and Language	148
4. New Considerations for Familial Sinistrality and Language Processing	153
5. Conclusions	168

7. How Special Is Language Production? Perspectives From Monitoring and Control	179
Nazbanou Nozari
1. The Special Place of Language	180
2. Language Production and the Need for Control	191
3. Assessing the Need for Control: The Primary Job of a Monitoring System	195
4. Domain-Generalty of Monitoring and Control in Language Production	202
5. Conclusion: How Special Is Language Production?	207
Acknowledgments	209
References	209

8. Alternatives and Inferences in the Communication of Meaning	215
Hannah Rohde and Chigusa Kurumada
1. Two Types of Alternatives	218
2. When Nothing Says Something: Roles of Alternative Forms	223
3. Intonational Phonology: Role of Alternative Meanings	227
4. Coreference: Combining Expectations for Meanings and Forms	235
5. Inferences Based on Alternative Forms and Meanings: A Bayesian Approach	240
6. Where Next?	246
Acknowledgments	252
References	252
9. Reading Ahead by Hedging Our Bets on Seeing the Future: Eye Tracking and Electrophysiology Evidence for Parafoveal Lexical Processing and Saccadic Control by Partial Word Recognition	263
Elizabeth R. Schotter
1. The Reading Speed Paradox	265
2. Hedging Our Bets : Coordinating Eye Movements and Language Processing	266
3. Seeing the Future : Obtaining Parafoveal Preview of Upcoming Words	267
4. Reading Ahead : Using Parafoveal Preview to Initiate Word Recognition	269
5. Prior Debates About Parafoveal Processing: Serial Versus Parallel Lexical Processing	276
6. Evidence for Parafoveal Processing From Electrophysiology Studies	280
7. Modeling Parafoveal Preview Effects	288
8. Summary	291
References	292
10. Individual Differences in the Real-Time Neural Dynamics of Language Comprehension	299
Darren Tanner, Maria Goldshtein and Benjamin Weissman
1. Introduction	300
2. Language-Related ERP Components	305
3. Some Quantitative Individual Differences	307
4. Qualitative Individual Differences in Non-native and Bilingual Morphosyntactic Processing	310
5. Monolingual Morphosyntactic, Semantic, and Thematic Processing and Some Psycholinguistic Conundrums	314
6. Higher-Order Inferencing and Multi-Modal Communication	319
7. Conclusions and Challenges for the Future	327
